HIGHLIGHTS FROM MEDICAL GRAND ROUNDS

■ WILLIAM S. WILKE, Editor

Combination therapy for rheumatoid arthritis: new paradigms of treatment 101

Recent evidence from long-term studies contradicts the perception that rheumatoid arthritis is slowly progressive, relatively benign, and readily controlled with monotherapy.

W. S. WILKE

Cushing's syndrome: easy to see, tricky to diagnose 102

The difficulty lies in determining whether the syndrome has a pituitary or nonpituitary cause.

L. R. SHEELER

Skin lesions: when to suspect systemic causes 104

Systemic diseases that can produce skin lesions cover a spectrum that includes autoimmune, neoplastic, and infectious disease.

REVIEW

Cardiopulmonary exercise testing in patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease 119

Defining the etiology of dyspnea, evaluating impairment, and assessing the response to therapy are among the current indications.

CONTRIBUTIONS

Monoamine oxidase inhibitors and elective surgery 129

This retrospective study of 32 patients challenges the notion that use of these agents is a contraindication for elective surgery.

Z. Y. EBRAHIM, J. O'HARA JR, L. BORDEN, AND OTHERS

Selective bowel decontamination with quinolones and nystatin reduces gram-negative and fungal infections in orthotopic liver transplant recipients 139

This regimen was found highly effective in reducing early serious infection in 17 consecutive patients.

CURRENT DRUG THERAPY

■ DONALD G. VIDT AND ALAN BAKST, Editors

Efficacy of beta blockade, thrombolytic therapy, and coronary angioplasty in diabetic patients with coronary artery disease 145

Determining the effectiveness of these interventions in diabetic patients has received little attention, despite the association of diabetes with increased mortality from coronary artery disease.

MEDICAL ETHICS

Futile medical treatment and patient consent 151

What are a physician's ethical responsibilities when a patient or surrogate demands futile life-saving treatment?

BENCH TO BEDSIDE

■ BEN H. BROUHARD, Editor

Potential molecular therapy for acute renal failure 166

As more is learned about renal epithelial cell regeneration and differentiation, exogenously administered growth promoters seem a likely intervention.
