|--|-----|---|-----|
| Introduction | 327 | Hypertension in Hispanic Americans | 345 |
| D. G. VIDT | | The language barrier, poverty, and limited access to health care raise the risk of inadequate diagnosis and control of hypertension in this growing population. | |
| Advances in noninvasive screening for renovascular disease | 328 | J. L. CANGIANO | |
| What are the current indications for the captopril plasma renin activity test, captopril renography, duplex ultrasonography, and magnetic resonance angiography? | | Cardiac function and dysfunction in hypertension | 351 |
| J. V. NALLY JR, J. W. OLIN, AND G. K. LAMMERT | | Assessment of systolic and diastolic function is important in the follow-up of hypertensive patients and in the choice of therapy. | |
| Antihypertensive treatment in patients with peripheral vascular disease | 337 | F. M. FOUAD | |
| This approach focuses on improving intermittent claudication, coronary artery disease, hyperlipidemia, and diabetes mellitus. | | Role of the renal microcirculation in antihypertensive therapy | 356 |
| J. W. OLIN | | Some drugs are better at maintaining renal function in hypertensive patients. Here are insights to more effective drug selection and combination therapy. | |
| | | S. R. INMAN, N. T. STOWE, AND D. G. VIDT | |

HYPERTENSION AND NEPHROLOGY UPDATE

Continued from p. 325

Role of cyclosporine
in glomerular diseases

363

Cyclosporine shows promise in renal disease, but randomized, controlled trials are needed to better define how and when to use it.

R. J. GLASSOCK

Coronary artery disease in renal transplant recipients

370

Screening for coronary artery disease before transplantation can identify high-risk patients and save lives and money.

W. E. BRAUN AND T. H. MARWICK

Infections and immunizations in organ transplant recipients:
a preventive approach

386

Early detection, prophylactic or preemptive therapy of specific infections, and collaboration between the infectious disease clinician and the transplant team are fundamental.

R. K. AVERY

Dialysis-related mortality in the United States

393

Approximately two thirds of US patients receive inadequate dialysis. What is the cause and what can be done?
