

NEW SERIES

Cardiovascular Board Review

THE FIRST INSTALLMENT in the new series, Cardiovascular Board Review, makes its debut in this issue of the Cleveland Clinic Journal of Medicine.

The new series resembles one of the most popular, long-running staples of the CCJM, the Internal Medicine Board Review. Both series use a real clinical case as a jumping off point for a question-and-answer exploration of the testing, differential diagnosis, and treatment of both common and uncommon conditions.

And just as the IM Board Review is based in part on a popular internal medicine board review course held every June, the new Cardiovascular Board Review series is an outgrowth of the cardiovascular medicine board review course held by The Cleveland Clinic each October.

As co-directors of that course, we hope the Cardiovascular Board Review series will serve both our internist and cardiologist readers, reviewing cardiology problems often encountered in daily practice.

CURTIS RIMMERMAN, MD
Head, Section of Clinical Cardiology,
Department of Cardiovascular Medicine,
The Cleveland Clinic

BRIAN P. GRIFFIN, MD
Director, Cardiovascular Medicine Fellowship
Training Program, Department of
Cardiovascular Medicine, The Cleveland Clinic